Murder, Magic, Madness Owen Davies 2005 This is the story of magic, marital strife, poisoning and public execution that became one of the biggest newspaper sensations in mid-Victorian England. In 1856 William Dove, a young tenant farmer, was tried and sent to his death at the gallows for poisoning his wife Harriet. The trial might have been a straightforward case of murder, but when Dove's involvement with Henry Harrison, 'the Leeds Wizard', and his Faustian pact with the Devil were revealed, a lengthy trial ensued to establish whether these beliefs were symptoms of madness. Owen Davies explores the social and psychological world of Dove and the Wizard, and the origins and tragic consequences of their friendship. He looks at the problems still faced by juries today in determining the insanity of a defendant, and the extent to which this should mitigate their punishment. The Victorian period is often portrayed as an age of great social and educational progress; this book shows how beliefs dismissed as 'medieval superstitions' continued to influence the thoughts and actions of people in urban and rural England. In addition to being essential source material for this book, newspapers played an important role in these events. Not only did Dove get the idea for his crime from a report in The Times, but for the first time the media began to dictate government policies on crime, just as they do today.

Je weet dat je dit wil Kristen Roupenian 2019-02-04 Je weet dat je dit wil is een prikkelende verhalenbundel over seks, daten en het moderne leven. Roupenians verhalen gaan over vrouwen thuis, op het werk, op een date, bij de dokter, met hun gezin en met hun vrienden. Vrouwen die worstelen met lust, boetedoening, schuld en woede. De verhalen fascineren maar wekken ook afkeer op, angst en verrukking, weerzin en opwinding. Je weet dat je dit wil toont aan dat Kristen Roupenian een gedurfde nieuwe stem is in de Amerikaanse literatuur. In een geestige, bijtende, ironische en expliciete stijl verkent ze de verstoorde machtsverhouding tussen mannen en vrouwen – en doet er nog een schepje bovenop.
